

ILLINOIS COAL MINES FIFTH INSPECTION DISTRICT

1883-1884

Submitted by: Jo Ann LADD HATFIELD
Rt. 2 Box 358
Herrin, IL 62948

The following information was abstracted from the Third Biennial Report of the Bureau of Labor Statistics Illinois 1884. The following is for the Fifth District for counties of Clinton, Gallatin, Jackson, Marion, Perry, Randolph, St. Clair, Saline, Washington, and Williamson. Robert WINNING, Inspector Fifth District.

Coal output was very small in 1883-84 compared to 1890 when Illinois employment increased from 200,000 to over 600,000 in 1920 the number of mines increased from 2500 in 1895 to a peak of 9,000 in 1919. Air ventilation, escapement outlets, and wages were of great importance to the miners and management at this time.

I abstracted the small coal mines by counties where small investors operated their mines on marginal gains. First, Mr. WINNINGS report to Mr. J. S. LORD, Secretary of the Bureau of Labor Statistics of Illinois:

Sir-I have the honor to submit herewith my report as Inspector of Coal Mines for the Fifth District, which embraces the lower extremity of the State, south of and including St. Clair county, for the year ending July 1, 1884.

During the year the coal trade has been unsettled and subject to serious disturbances, owing to floods on one hand, and fluctuations in freight rates to the St. Louis market on the other. This rate was at one time as low as 12-1/2 cents a ton to all shippers within a radius of 18 miles from St. Louis. This led to such competition for that trade that coal was in some instances sold and delivered to retail consumers in that city as low as $1.75 per ton.

Many operators outside that radius were accordingly obliged to shut down. Everywhere there was reduction of expenses and of the prices of mining. Machine mining was stimulated, and many miners, especially from the vicinity of Belleville, left the district altogether.

On the other hand, the unusually high water of the Ohio river last spring caused the suspension of the mines in Gallatin and Saline counties, and floods impaired the business of Perry county.

Notwithstanding these vicissitudes, and possibly on account of the stimulus they afforded, the aggregate output of the district is somewhat greater for this year than any previous year, the gain being principally in St. Clair county.

Number of tons mined in the district in 1883.....1,990,921
Number of tons mined in the district in 1884.....2,128,230
Increase.....137,309

Twenty-eight indictments have been found against mine operators in this district for failure to comply with the law requiring the coal of each miner to be weighted at the mines. In twenty instances the parties were fined; seven cases were taken up to the Appellate Court, and one to the Supreme Court of the State, from neither of which have decisions yet been rendered.

There has been a good deal of conflict and bitterness for several years in the St. Clair district occasioned by the use of mining machines, and the hand-miners, by working the coal for very low prices, have hoped to demonstrate that the machines could not be profitably used. In this way prices for mining have run down from 50 cents a ton as low as 28 cents. Regular miners have also refused to recognize the machines by not accepting work on them, and the owners have retaliated by refusing to put the regular miners on, and have employed others for the machines and for blasting and hauling the coal, all of which has aggravated the feeling of miners to successfully work his coal.

Popular sentiment, however, is rather with the miners than the owners, and physicians have pronounced the effect of the compressed air upon the machine operators to be injurious to health.

During the summer a movement was set on foot to establish a living rate of wages for the hand-miner, but after several conferences and a failure to agree, the men finally went to work for a cent and a half a bushel. Subsequently, however, the owners advanced his rate to a cent and three-quarters per bushel, or 43-3/4 cents per ton, which is now the ruling price for hand-mining.

Accompanying this I submit my notes on the different mines in each county, a detailed record of the casualties which have occurred, and such tables of statistics of the production of coal, etc., as required by law.

Very respectfully,
Robert WINNING,
Inspector 5th District.

CASUALTIES IN THE FIFTH DISTRICT

FATAL ACCIDENTS

- Frank COOK, driver at the mine of the FRIZZELL Coal Co., aged 18, was killed by being caught with the cage. The company settled with his mother, who is a widow. Perry Co.
- Thomas SOWMAN was killed October 17, 1883, at Tunnel No. 7 of the St. Louis Ore and Steel Company, by the fall of coal. He had left in his room to finish loading some coal by the other men working in the vicinity, and by the man who worked in the room with him. Subsequently the driver returned for the coal, saw no light in the room and went away, supposing Mr. SOWMAN had also gone. As he was missed, however, at supper, search was made for him, when he was found in his room with his head crushed under a mass of coal which had fallen upon him. He left a widow and three children. Jackson Co., Murphysboro, IL.

- Alexander TEMPLE was killed November 30, 1883, at ROSEBOROUGH'S shaft, on the Cairo and St. Louis Railroad, by a fall of coal. He was 18 years old, and was working alone in a room adjoining that of his brother-in-law. The latter on going in to look after him found him crushed beneath the coal and dead. Sparta, Randolph Co., IL

- Fritz HEISLER, widower, aged 63, was killed by falling coal in his room at KNAUS & BROTHER'S mine, December 11, 1883. He was loading his box and standing under the coal which was cut on one side. It gave way without warning and killed him instantly. This practice of working under coal which is partly detached is a custom more or less prevalent in this district, and miners are disposed to resent any suggestion as to the danger of it. St. Clair Co., IL

- Edward SUDDOTH was killed by the falling of coal at the Trenton mine, on the 1st of March, 1884. Trenton, Clinton Co., IL

- Thomas HUDSON was killed at Tunnel No. 7, St. Louis Ore and Steel Compaany, by a fall of the top coal. He had fired a shot just before dinner, and immediately afterwards went in to the face and sat down in front of the coal, when it fell upon him. He died from his injuries before he could be removed from the mine. He left a widow and four children. Murphysboro, Jackson Co., IL

- Paul SUPERABLE, aged 40, unmarried, was underming a standing shot, working alone because he was not considered a good workman. There was a slip running through the coal and roof, and when he had cut under to the slip, the coal and rock came down, crushing him so that he died before he could be carried home. [Note: No town or mine listed]

- Adam KUNKLE was killed at Conrad REINICKE'S Shaft No. 1, May 17, 1884. He was engaged the day before to shovel away from a machine. While so occupied, some loose coal from the face fell on him in such a manner as to inflict fatal injuries, Birkner, St. Clair Co., IL

NON-FATAL ACCIDENTS

-June 6, 1883, at Centralia mines. Joseph TAYLOR fired a shot which knocked out the props; while resetting them a quantity of slate fell, breaking his leg. Marion Co., IL

-Sept. 7, 1883, at White Oak Mine. John HUILSON had his head bruised by falling slate, Marissa, St. Clair Co., IL

- July 12, 1883, Fred DESBERGH while setting props, had both legs broken by falling slate at Marissa Coal Co's mine, Marissa, St. Clair Co., IL.

- Nov. 15, 1883, while Martin SAMLLAM was making a cartridge it burst. In catching the powder in his hat, it ignited from a spark from his lamp, exploding a keg of powder near by burning him severely. [Note: No mine or town listed]

SUNNYSIDE MINE - HERRIN, IL JAN. 27, 1915

Photo reads: TOP MEN - these are the boys that make the mine go. Sunnyside Mine, Herrin, IL 1-27-15. U.M.W.A. Local No. 944. Bottom row left end is Jasper JONES, step-father of Virginia LONG SMITH. Can anyone identify any of the other miners in the picture?

Sunnyside mine was in section 25 of Blairsville township, was the second in the Herrin field. Operations were begun in September 1899 by the Sunnyside coal company, in which Thomas G. WARDER was a partner. Six years later he bought out the others and reorganized the ownership as the T.G. WARDEN Coal Company.

One morning in November 1899 Mr. and Mrs. John GOALLBY and their five children got off Billy BRYAN'S train at Sunnyside junction in the midst of a corn field. A frame house had been built for them to live in, but the mine buildings were still blue prints. Their house in the woods was the only new one west of Park avenue. Herrin was a cluster of small buildings around the railroad station.

Coal was struck by the night shift November 29, 1899. The mine buildings were put up that winter. Jack GOALBY became superintendent, Albert GURNEY and John GOULD master mechanic, W. H. ("Sunnyside") BROWN the chief clerk, J.M. BAILIE the washer boss, and Captain J. W. TOLER the farm boss. Though the company owned 1360 acres of land, not enough feed could be raised for their twenty-two mules. The land deserved its nickname, "Buckhorn."

T.G. WARDEN was proud of his mine, and especially of his washer, one of the first in southern Illinois. The west limits of Herrin were extended into Blairsville township to include the miners' homes around Sunnyside. Mr. WARDEN gave the land for Sunnyside school, district 30, to replace the old Brownville school.

One Sunday morning, April 21, 1921 the washer and tippie burned. A fire in a stove caught miners' clothing hung to dry, the oil soaked floor began to blaze, and Sunnyside mine went up in smoke. Mr. WARDEN lost interest in the mine and in 1922 he sold it to J. M. McILVAINE of Chicago who was then operating the Bobby Dick mine. Mr. McILVAINE ran the mine for two years, then sold to the Burton coal company. These efforts to rebuild and work the coal never matched the grand old days. Sunnyside was closed down in 1925. MOTHER JONES

Mary HARRIS JONES (May 1, 1830-Nov. 30, 1930), labor agitator, known as "Mother" JONES, was born in Cork, Ireland, to Richard and Helen HARRIS. Her father emigrated to the United States in 1835 and, on acquiring citizenship, arranged for his wife and children to follow him. Mary HARRIS attended common school and normal school in Toronto, Canada, where her father took the family while he worked as a railroad construction laborer. She first taught in a convent in Monroe, Michigan, but soon went to Chicago to operate a dressmaking business. She was drawn back into teaching in Memphis, Tennessee, and there in 1861 was married to "a staunch member" of the Iron Molders' Union named JONES. Her husband and their four small children died in an epidemic of yellow fever that ravaged Memphis in 1867. After serving as a volunteer nurse until the disease was halted, the bereft widow returned to Chicago and resumed dressmaking. As she worked on the clothes of families of wealth, she began to resent economic and social inequities. Burned out of all her possessions by the Chicago Fire of 1871, she found a measure of comfort at the scorched hall of the Knights of Labor, whose meetings she attended. She saw the early labor leaders as "saints and martyrs," and thereafter she committed herself increasingly to their struggle against low wages, long hours, and depressed working conditions.

Where there was a strike, she organized and aided the workers; where there was none, she held educational meetings. Beginning in the early 1890's, her thin, wiry figure became especially identified with the struggles of the coal miners.

The production of bituminous coal in West Virginia was omitted from the agreements which the United Mine Workers made with operators in the other Eastern fields. Mother JONES took the lead in organizing unions in that state, first in the northern (Fairmount) district and later in the New River coal camps. In 1903 she broke off an organizing journey through West Virginia to go to Colorado, where, disguised as a peddler, she collected information that led to a walkout in that exploited area. When the Mine Workers' president, John MITCHELL, disavowed the strike, she publicly condemned him and quit her union job.

Renewed appeals to help the coal miners proved irresistible, and in 1911 she was back in West Virginia organizing local unions. Following the mine strike of 1912-13 she was tried by a state militia military court, convicted on a charge of conspiracy to commit murder, and sentenced to prison for twenty years. Labor circles protested strongly, and a Senate investigation was voted, but before it began Mother JONES was freed by the newly elected governor of West Virginia. (The Autobiography of Mother JONES, (1925), edited by Mary F. Parton)

The following article appeared February 9, 1909 in the Herrin Journal: Mother JONES, the famous labor leader, arrived in Herrin Wednesday evening and will deliver an address Thursday night in the Socialist Hall on North Park Avenue.

The hundredth anniversary of her birth, May 1, 1930, was celebrated with a reception at the Silver Spring, Maryland, home of her friend Mrs. Walter BURGESS, with whom she lived out her last years. White-haired, her small frame dressed in the long familiar black, she spoke with her old vigor into a talking-picture camera. Thanking John D. ROCKEFELLER, Jr., for a message of congratulations, she recalled her battles at the ROCKEFELLER-owned mines of Colorado and said: "He's a damn good sport. I've licked him many times, but we've made peace." As she had fallen out with John MITCHELL, so she parted company with John L. LEWIS, after her hundredth birthday she sent $1,000 of the money she had accumulated from gifts and organizing work to aid an insurgent group of Illinois miners who were seeking to oust LEWIS from the presidency of the United Mine Workers. She died at Silver Spring seven months after her centennial birthday. After a high requiem mass in Washington, D.C., her body was taken to the bituminous coal fields of southern Illinois, where, at Mount Olive, about forty miles northeast of Saint Louis, in the Union Miners Cemetery, she was buried near the graves of victims of the Virden, Illinois, mine riot of 1898.

The labor writer Tom TIPPETT, who saw Mother JONES at first hand, wrote that she was out of place in the union office because of her quarrelsome habits and lack of constructive policy. Noting that she made her real contribution in the field, he said: "With one speech she often threw a whole community on strike and she could keep the strikers loyal month after month on empty stomachs and behind prison bars". (Encyclopedia of the Social Sciences, VIII, 415).

Above all she was passionately humane, and this quality, as much as her utter fearlessness, brought her success where others had failed.

Sign reads: "Maw JONES in W. Virginia jail." Edgar Q. LONG, 5th from left was President of the UMWA Union in Herrin, IL.
